American Classroom Culture

International students are sometimes surprised by students’ behavior in class. American students are likely to dress casually, may bring drinks or snacks to class and may speak to the instructor in an informal manner.

Students are expected to contribute to, and are often evaluated on, their participation in class. It is not disrespectful to question or engage the professor; it is considered a sign of interest and original thought.

Some instructors run a more formal classroom than others. The best thing to do is observe and adapt to the degree that you are comfortable.
