Honors student profiles:

Connor Mallon

High school: Grayslake Central

Major: political science/philosophy

Memorable class at CLC: By far my favorite class was the Honors Scholars seminar, a collection of extremely capable students. I made friends and allies that I could talk about anything with, while also learning advanced topics presented by diverse faculty across the college.

Career goal: I hope to be involved in U.S. governance or law. I would love to enter the U.S. Foreign Service if able; otherwise I would enjoy practicing law, preferably estate or criminal law. Serving as a government analyst or campaign manager would also suit my interests.

Advice for honors students interested in CLC: Prepare to work hard, but also be prepared to benefit from that work. It takes a good work ethic and a refined mind to succeed in honors courses. The diversity of CLC is one of its greatest strengths. You can learn about the radically different lives and worldviews of people that live a few miles away from you.

Connor was awarded a full-tuition scholarship to Elmhurst College.

Hannah Cassidy

High school: Grant

Major: speech pathology and English

CLC involvement: Lead Student Ambassador for New Student Orientation, women's volleyball team, and member of Campus Leaders for Community Service, Student Experience Team, Phi Theta Kappa, Honors Program, and Honors Scholars.

Memorable professor: Professor John Tenuto changed my perspective of the world in the most beneficial way, and gave me the courage to dig deeper into what I am taught. He suggested to never take information as it is given to you. Instead, he encouraged us to do our own research and analyze what we're taught in order to create our own opinions.

Advice for honors students interested in CLC: Become close with your professors and take advantage of the knowledge that they offer you. Make time for reading outside of class. And lastly, do not compare yourself to anyone. You will be successful at your own pace in your own way and success should not be a race.
