The College of Lake County course catalog describes American Decades and says of it: “This course introduces students to the interdisciplinary study of American Culture by examining the intercultural/multicultural ideas, process, values, motifs and traditions that have shaped our ‘pluralistic’ society. American history, philosophy, literature, visual and performing arts will be studied. Emphasis will be placed on reflecting the diverse cultural constituency of the United States and the cultural identity of American racial and ethnic minorities. Focus will be placed on specific decades; by comparing these decades students will develop analyzing and synthesizing skills which will be used to develop a holistic picture of American life.” Specifically, this Honors section of American Decades should help students broaden and deepen their understanding of several major themes and issues around which American artists focus much of their work. Their concerns include the role of the individual in society and a definition of the American dream as well as specific political, cultural, psychological, philosophical, historical, aesthetic and social conflicts. Specifically, this course will ask students to analyze cultural products that explore the nature of the American dream and the American identity and examine them in the perspectives of race, class and gender. This course will not seek to proselytize about the solutions to the issues so much as it will explore the questions that cultural products raise. The course also will explore cultural products as rhetorical devices addressed to an audience, often a mass audience. The key to examining cultural products in this course will be context and complexity over isolation and simplicity.

Course Outcomes

The study of culture in its full historical context can make life more interesting. That said, this course is designed to help students achieve several specific learning outcomes. Through this course, students should be able to:

1. Identify some of the major purposes of American cultural product and how to identify which purposes a creator has chosen.
2. Use the vocabulary for discussing cultural products, including plot, theme, character, tone, mood, symbol, irony and point of view.
3. Understand the genres of culture, including in literature alone short stories, novels, drama and poetry as well as creative nonfiction.
4. Increase their reading skills to meet the demands placed upon students who examine culture.
5. Present their ideas and questions about American culture clearly in discussions, reports and panels.
6. Write clearly and logically about their ideas and opinions of American culture and about specific work exploring it.
7. Understand how taste in cultural products differs from appreciation of cultural products.
8. Recognize how historical context helps in understanding American culture and specific cultural products.

9. Identify some of the major styles and philosophies that influence the creators of American cultural products in the Twentieth Century and beyond, including realism, naturalism, expressionism, existentialism and surrealism.
10. Sharpen their critical thinking to question and assess how well a creator succeeds in achieving a purpose in a cultural product.
11. Understand the role of convention, invention, form and formula in the creation and understanding of American cultural products.

Additionally, this course hopes to encourage students to explore their reasons for liking or disliking a work of American culture and to challenge their assumptions about what makes artistic as well as popular success. It also hopes to help students understand the experiences, cares and aspirations of people unlike themselves when an artist shows them an unfamiliar world. Finally, this course hopes to encourage students to ask themselves whether a better understanding and appreciation of American culture in its historical context can increase their awareness and tolerance of other people in American society.

Methods

Students should view the class as a guided group discussion. They will thoughtfully and carefully examine cultural works and talk about what they have examined in class. The class thus presupposes that they will complete the assignments to help generate intelligent discussions.

Course Policies

Attendance: Because discussions and reports are an important part of the class, attendance is crucial. Presentations and discussions cannot be made up, although a missed class can be excused because of a legitimate reason. Students who know they must miss a class because of illness or other serious circumstances should notify the instructor in advance (by telephone, if necessary), not after the fact. Email and other notes after the fact are not acceptable methods of informing the instructor about a missed class or assignment. Missed work that has been excused must be made up in an acceptable manner within one week. Finally, please be on time for class and come prepared to talk about the work to be examined.

Grading: Final grades will be based on all work done during the semester, with some emphasis on improvement. The grade for the class will be determined as follows:

- Class Participation: 10 percent
- Discussion Leadership (Panel): 10 percent
- Exam 1: 20 percent
- Exam 2: 20 percent
- Personal Response Essays/Journals: 10 percent
- Presentation: 15 percent
- Final Exam: 15 percent

Academic Integrity & Class Conduct: This course adheres to the regulations and policies outlined in the Student Rights and Responsibilities material made available to all students by the College of Lake County. This course also simulates professional standards for discussions and lectures in higher education as well as business. These standards also apply to matters of integrity. As a guideline, people have the trust of others until they lose that trust. As another guideline, this class takes the form of lecture and guided group discussion. In both formats, one person at a time has the floor to speak. In addition, literature should foster mutual respect and tolerance in the discussion of ideas that challenge stereotypes and complacent thinking. Class discussion seeks to practice that respect and tolerance while providing the benefits and atmosphere of academic freedom and the First Amendment.

Final Exam: 2– 3:50 p.m. May 11 (Thursday)
