CORRECTIONAL COUNSELING (Associate in Applied Science) Plan 25HK

Correctional treatment specialists, also known as case managers or correctional counselors, work with those in the criminal justice system and develop rehabilitation plans for them to follow when they are no longer in prison or on parole. They may assist in evaluating inmates using questionnaires and psychological tests. They may also work with criminal justice clients in the community through community correction programs such as halfway houses, public restitution, probation and pre or early release programs. Services include planning education and training programs to improve offenders' job skills. Correctional treatment specialists write case reports and may help set up counseling for the offenders and their families, aid in job placement and find housing.
